II. READING (2 points)

Part 1: Read the passage and choose the correct answer to each of the following questions.

Ending cyberbullying – one message at a time

This message may be hurtful. Are you sure you want to post it? What if this message appeared every time a teenager tried to post an insulting message about someone on Facebook or Twitter? Trisha Prabhu, a 14-year-old high school student from Illinois in the USA, thinks that this message could help end one of the world's biggest teen problems – cyberbullying.

Ever since she was a young girl, Trisha has been fascinated by how the brain works, and in the future she wants to study the subject at university. For now, though, she's using her knowledge of the brain to help end cyberbullying. According to Trisha, the part of the brain that is responsible for self-control is less developed in teens than in adults. This means that teens are more likely to do things without thinking about them carefully first. As Trisha says, "A teenager's brain is like a car with no brakes".

So Trisha developed a piece of software called ReThink that forces teens to think about their actions online. When it is installed on a computer, ReThink looks for words that a user wants to post on a social networking site which might be hurtful to others. Then, it asks the user if they are sure they want to post the message. And it works. Trisha says that around 90% of teens who plan to post a hurtful message reconsider and decide not to because of ReThink.

Now, parents and schools are downloading ReThink and Trisha even presented her software at the Google Science Fair in 2014. ReThink shows that, with just a little more time to think, cyberbullies are the ones that can end cyberbullying.

- A. making guidelines to send proper messages to social networking sites.
B. reporting cyberbullies to the police.
C. not allowing users to send insulting message.
D. making users think about the messages they plan to send.

Question 14: What could be another suitable title for the text?

- A. What to do if you are cyberbullied
B. Making teens think twice online
C. The consequences of cyberbullying
D. Teens could not be hurtful online

Part 2: Read the passage and choose the correct answer to each of the following questions.

It is said that most people have no more than 30 friends at any given time and 400 over the whole of their lives. However, on social networking sites, most users have about 150 friends. If these numbers are correct, then friendship means different things in different situations.

One of the reasons for having more online friends than real friends at a point in time is that online friendships do not require much time and energy: it is easy to accept friendships and keep them forever. Another possibility is that it is difficult to say no when somebody asks us to be their friend online, even if we feel we don't really know them. The fact that they ask us suggests that they do consider us a friend, which is a nice feeling. Alternatively, they might be collectors of online friends and just want to use us to get a higher number of friends and appear to be popular.

Online friendships are quite easy, but in the real world, decisions about friendships are harder to make. There are no rules about friendship. There are no guidelines about how to make friends, how to keep friendships going, and how to finish friendship if we want to move on. People have very different opinions about this: some people would die for their friends and they value them more than family. Others say that friends are temporary, only there to help each other until they are no longer needed. If people with such different views become friends, this can lead to problems.

Because of these different definitions of friendship, it is easy to be unhappy about our friendships. We may want them to be deeper or closer, or we may want to have more friends in our lives. Sometimes, we simply do not have the time to develop our friendships, or we fear we have left it too late in life to start. If we move to another country or city, we have to find ways to make new friends again.

This dissatisfaction shows us how important friendships are for most of us. We should not think that it could be too late to build friendships. We, we also need to understand that the need to be around other people is one that is shared by many. Therefore, we should not be too frightened about starting to talk to people who in the future may become our friends; it is likely that they too would like to get closer to us. Remember what people say: strangers are friends we have not met yet.

Question 15: How many friends do the majority of people probably have?

- A. 400 internet friends over the course of the lives
B. 30 real friends or fewer
C. a minimum of 30 real friends
D. 150 internet friends
