Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions

Although we are all natural born liars, most of us seem to take it for granted that lying is bad. However, psychologists argue that lying is just as important as any other social skill we possess.

We learn the art of deception very early in life; by the age of five, we have not only become quite efficient at lying, but we have also learnt how to read people's reactions and act accordingly.

For example, if someone is avoiding direct eye contact with us, this makes us think that we're being lied to so we might lie, too. A person's smile is also a giveaway. A genuine smile makes the skin near the eyes crease, whereas a "put on" smile doesn't have the same effect on the facial features as a real one.

Even though both women and men know how to watch out for clues that somebody is lying, it is a fact that women are far more skillful liars than men. Despite this, women are also more affected by other people's feelings, so they have more sympathy for them. As a result, women tend to be more willing to have an honest conversation.

The UK has a vast variety of higher education opportunities to offer students with over 100 universities offering various degree programs for students from the UK and around the world. In the UK about one-third of all students go on to some form of higher education and this number is well over 50% for students from Scotland. This makes competition for places very fierce and so it is advised to apply early for courses.

In the UK most undergraduate degree programs take three years to finish; however, the "sandwich course" is increasing in popularity, which is four years and involves one year in the workplace (normally in your third year). In Scotland, the courses are four years in length for undergraduate programs.

For graduate or masters programs, they are generally shorter in length and undertaken after graduation of your undergraduate program. Some professional degrees like medicine, veterinary, law, etc. have longer programs that can be as much as five years.

From 2007, universities in the UK are allowed to charge students from the UK up to £3,070 per year (depending on the school and location). For students from the EU, you will also only have to pay the same fees as students from the UK, but international students from the rest of the world will have to pay the full
