Sometimes, accidents can lead to wonderful inventions, such as in the cases below.

Post-It Notes

In 1968, Dr. Spencer Silver was trying to invent super strong glue which dried immediately. However, he was not successful and could only invent a very weak glue that never seemed to dry. And that was how the Post-it note was invented by chance.

Coca-Cola

In 1886, John Pemberton was trying to find a cure for headaches. He tried to mix together some ingredients, but when his lab assistant added fizzy water by accident, the world's first Coca-Cola was born.

Crisps

In 1853, a chef named George Crum received complaints from a customer at his restaurant that the fried potatoes he cooked were too thick and bland. He was so annoyed that he decided to slice the potatoes as thin as possible, fry them and add a lot of salt. To his surprise, the customer loved the dish, and we have also loved it until today as well!

TRANSCRIPT

Part 1: Listen to the conversation between Ann and Linh. Circle the best answer A, B, or C. You will listen TWICE.

Ann: Hello, Linh. What are you doing?

Linh: Well, I'm filling out the volunteer application form. This year, our school will organize a 3-week community service campaign to help poor children, in which the volunteers can teach English language as tutors. If you cannot arrange time to take part in, you can donate any kinds of materials like money, books, clothes, or even toys that are still in good use.

Ann: That's interesting! And where are the volunteers going to do those activities?

Linh: Well, the trip is going to last 3 weeks, and we are visiting a mountainous commute located in northern Viet Nam. It's a remote area very far from the town, where the local young learners find it hard to go to a language center to learn English. We are going to bring knowledge to the children. Besides, this is also a good chance for us to learn some social skills and learn to work effectively in a team.

Ann: I can't agree more. I think we can learn more about daily life, culture, and cuisine of the people living there too. It's a pity that I cannot join these activities. However, I can send these children some lovely hand puppets and some of my books.

Linh: That would be great, Ann. After coming back, each member will write a reflection paper so that the organizers will be able to do better in the next campaign. I'll share it with you.

Ann: Thanks a lot Linh! It's so nice of you!
